While the World Catches Up to 5G, China Has Launched 10G introduced 10G

China leads in next-generation internet services, with its 10G network offering download rates of 10,000 Mbps, enabling users to download a 20GB 4K movie in less than 20 seconds. Despite US measures preventing tech progress, such as tariffs on EVs and solar equipment, and preventing access to innovative semiconductors, China continues to dominate the market in this emerging technology. In Africa and India, 4G is the most widely used standard, and 5G adoption is still in its infancy. Only 25% of mobile customers worldwide are on 5G as of April 2025, and even 5G-Advanced is just beginning to take off. In 2024, 74% of mobile connections were in Latin America, compared to just 17% in Sub-Saharan Africa. North America has only attained 77% 5G adoption, whereas Southeast Asia had a 39.2% acceptance rate. China's 10G network, which is only available in a few places, is a preview of a future in which real-time big data powers telemedicine, virtual schools, and agribusiness.

US-China Trade Tensions Update

New reports from the IMF and US Federal Reserve highlight growing concerns over global economic uncertainty driven by US-China trade tensions. The IMF's latest World Economic Outlook warns that escalating tariffs and unpredictable policies are weakening both short-term and long-term growth prospects, with global growth forecasts being sharply downgraded. The US Fed's Beige Book similarly notes that while overall economic activity was little changed, business sentiment worsened in many regions due to fears around tariffs. Consumer spending, especially on non-automobile goods, also showed signs of slowing. In China, businesses are adapting by planning small-scale factories in the US to bypass tariffs, while the Chinese government is exploring possible exemptions on essential imports from the US, although no decisions have been announced yet. The world now watches as the 90-day pause on President Trump's tariffs approaches its July deadline, with high uncertainty over future trade actions.

India Launches Operation Sindoor After Pahalgam Terror Attack; Global Support Follows

On April 22, 2025, a brutal terrorist attack in Pahalgam's Baisaran Valley left 26 dead and over 20 injured, including Indian and Nepali tourists. In response, India launched Operation Sindoor, a multi-day military campaign targeting terror camps in Pakistan and PoK linked to Jaish-e-Mohammed and Lashkar-e-Taiba. India also suspended the Indus Waters Treaty, expelled Pakistani diplomats, and closed border crossings.

Pakistan retaliated by suspending the Simla Agreement and closing its airspace. The Indian Army and Navy demonstrated strategic strength, with missile strikes and naval deployment in the Arabian Sea. Meanwhile, countries like the U.S. and Malaysia expressed strong support for India's actions, while the global community urged restraint and dialogue.

In the Time of Conflict, Time to Say with One Voice: Nation First!

I often enjoy sitting quietly in my office, sipping hot cup of tea, watching senior students laugh, chatter, play mischief in the corridors. Viewing such candid moments is the most blissful part of my day. However, of late, something has changed. These activities are still continuing. Children are oblivious to the clouds darkening each day, these children – innocent, hopeful, full of dreams – have no idea of the looming shadow that the Indo-Pak war threat casts over us all. Today roles have changed. Today I cannot just remain a Vice Principal or a woman, or a mother, or a teacher. Today above all, my most important role is that of a citizen of this great nation. And dear Readers, I feel the urgent need to speak – to share what has long remained unspoken in the depths of my conscience. The winds of conflict are unsettling. The murmurs of war might seem distant for now, but the moods are already grim and in times like these, it is no longer enough to talk about nation-building in abstract terms. It is time to act – decisively, and with unity! I am a proud wife of an Air Force officer. For me patriotism does not happen on Independence Day or the Republic Day. For me Patriotism is not reserved for the battlefield either. Patriotism runs in the family; it runs in our veins. Ideally, it should begin in classrooms, in homes, in everyday decisions. As educators, parents, and responsible citizens, we must teach our children what it truly means to love their country. It's not just about saluting the flag or singing the anthem after every school event – it's about sacrifice, unity, and making choices that benefit the nation before us. I intend to make patriotism part of our school culture. Let students write essays on real-life heroes, not just memorize dates. Let them engage in discussions about integrity, service, and national pride. Let our morning assemblies echo not just with prayer, but also with pledges of commitment to our country. Largely, we have succeeded in our ideas too but not enough. We need to act in a bigger way!! In this critical hour, every rupee spent is a statement of intent. We must understand that our economy is as much a part of our national defence as our armed forces are. It pains me to see the markets flooded with foreign – especially Chinese – products, when our own artisans and vendors struggle to survive. By buying Chinese goods, we empower the very systems that may one day stand against us. This is not mere rhetoric – it is a harsh reality. We must awaken. We must become Vocal for Local. From the pencil cases in our students' bags to the decorations in our homes, let us make a conscious shift. Support the local toy maker, the neighbourhood craftsman, the Indian manufacturer. Let every purchase we make, be a vote for our country. It's time to shake everyone out of their slumber. This is not a fight for soldiers alone. It is a test for all of us. Our love for the nation must reflect in the choices we make daily. Let's have honest conversations with our children about current events. Let's replace the obsession with imported brands with pride in Made in India. Let us make a sincere effort to promote swadeshi goods and discourage the use of foreign items. But my pain does not end with this. There is much more to ponder over..... Whenever there is a war like situation or geopolitical conflicts shadow us, often hear people say things like, "I am an artist; I have nothing to do with war," or "I am a writer, a thinker – wars are not my concern as I see no boundaries." And every time I hear such words, I feel aghast. Yes, artists are connected globally through their art. Writers share ideas that transcend borders. Teachers preach Vasudhaiva Kutumbakam i.e. the world is one family. All of this is beautiful and true. But I ask, my grand family: India!! Who shall fight for our motherland? Are we okay to let go of a piece of our motherland? Let Kashmir go away and then what.... Punjab? Then the Seven- Sisters?? Are we okay to cut our motherland into pieces?? No?? Then, who shall save our motherland? Only the soldiers? Is war only the burden of those in uniform? What about us – the ordinary citizens, the educators, the creators, the consumers? Are we not hiding behind lofty ideals and global identities just to stay comfortable, to avoid discomfort, to remain in our cocoon and not feel disturbed? Our enemy is not just at the border; it lurks in contentment, in ignorance, in divided loyalties. But I believe in the spirit of India. The spirit of India cannot be dampened. We survived against all odds earlier and we shall survive now too. I believe in our children, our people, our courage. As a Vice Principal, I may not hold a rifle today, but I hold a pen. – and with it, I hope to ignite thought, responsibility, and change.

Jai Hind.

Upgrade- Blake Crouch By- Avneet Mishra, X-B

Upgrade is not just a sci-fi thriller; it's a punch to the brain and heart at once. Blake Crouch takes the idea of genetic perfection and spins it into a narrative that's equal parts adrenaline and existential crisis.

Logan Ramsay didn't ask to be "fixed," but here he is, faster, smarter, deadlier, and stuck questioning whether humanity's flaws are actually its strengths. It's not just about DNA, it's about identity, morality, and the terrifying consequences of playing god. Crouch doesn't slow down, and neither will you.

If sci-fi twists your mind, Upgrade will twist your entire worldview. Read it, then rethink everything.

The Abused Consumer

Addicts and drugs are like toast and butter

Till the toast is burnt,

And there is nothing left of the butter.

The nicotine derived from addiction

The profit the pleasure receives

Two can play this game,

Except one shalln't be free

Getting high is the trend of the day

The trend of the day

Which left so many dead bodies

And all the lives left to decay.

I SPY PUZZLEThe Festival

-Rabindranath Tagore

The whole world looks on

To-day, the world's festival has come.

O beggar, open your gate!

Let the bridegroom enter your house.

The world has left its bed,

And has awakened to smile.

The clouds float in the sky,

The swans spread their wings on the lake,

The shepherd plays on his flute,

And the villagers dance in the fields.

O beggar, open your gate!

Let the bridegroom enter your house.

There is no sleep to-day,

And the air is full of music.

Awake, heart, awake!

Let the bridegroom enter your house.

The Town Where Dreams Come True

Imagine a town hidden between the folds of misty mountains, where every dream whispered into the night sky is heard — and answered. They call it Lunaria, though few maps dare to mark it. Here, dreams are not just stories you forget in the morning; they are seeds that grow into reality.

The streets of Lunaria are lined with shimmering cobblestones that glow softly under your footsteps. Little cafes spill out music and laughter, where poets, inventors, and explorers gather to share their wishes. A boy dreaming of flight finds himself designing wings in a bustling workshop. A girl who wished to heal discovers gardens where every flower carries a cure.

In Lunaria, dreams are respected like ancient treasures. Everyone is encouraged to dream boldly — to imagine worlds beyond stars, oceans without end, songs that heal sadness. No one laughs at someone else’s dreams. Instead, the town celebrates every new hope that is born, lighting paper lanterns that float into the sky at night, carrying prayers and promises with them.

But Lunaria has one rule: dreams must be pure. Greedy dreams, selfish dreams — they vanish the moment you cross the town’s misty borders. Only dreams that make the world brighter can survive.

They say finding Lunaria is not about maps or roads. It’s about holding your dreams so tightly, and believing in them so fiercely, that the path appears beneath your feet. Maybe, somewhere deep inside, each of us carries a small piece of Lunaria already — waiting for the day we choose to chase it.

Rising After Tragedy: How History Teaches Us to Heal

Throughout history, moments of tragedy have shaken communities, much like the recent heartbreaking incident in Pahalgam. Yet again and again, people have shown an incredible strength to rebuild, remember, and rise. One such moment was the 26/11 Mumbai attacks in 2008, when terrorists attacked multiple locations across Mumbai, leaving the city in fear and sorrow. Instead of breaking, Mumbai chose resilience. Ordinary citizens helped each other, blood donations flooded hospitals, and life, though wounded, found a way to move forward. Public memorials were created to honor the lives lost, reminding future generations of both pain and strength. Similarly, after the 9/11 attacks in New York in 2001, the world watched as rescue workers, families, and communities came together. In the face of deep grief, acts of kindness, art, and remembrance rose up. The 9/11 Memorial now stands as a symbol of loss, but also of hope and unity. In India’s own history, the Kargil War of 1999 caused heavy emotional scars. Yet, the country came together in collective mourning and pride, honoring the sacrifices through national ceremonies, tributes, and stories that inspired patriotism and solidarity.

PM Modi Inaugurates Khelo India Youth Games 2025; Rajasthan Wins First Gold

Prime Minister Narendra Modi inaugurated the 7th Khelo India Youth Games on May 4, 2025, via videoconference, praising young athletes as symbols of determination. The event is being held across five cities in Bihar. Rajasthan's Prachi and Mayank Choudhary won the first gold in the 10m air pistol mixed team event, narrowly defeating Uttar Pradesh 17-15. Delhi claimed bronze by beating Haryana 16-14.

IPL crown at last: RCB Wins The Championship

In the immediacy of RCB wrapping their collective hands around the Indian Premier League trophy for the first time on Tuesday night, life in the one-time Garden City came to an absolute standstill. Vast stretches of some of the most iconic thoroughfares were swamped by thousands who came out to express their appreciation at their heroes' tryst with glory. Vehicular movement was non-existent, but there was none of the usual impatience, no angry words exchanged, no instances of road rage that have become the norm in recent times. "Tonight, I will sleep like a baby," Kohli insisted, flanked by two RCB giants - Universe Boss Chris Gale and his brother from another mother, AB de Villiers. The fans erupted in cheers for days after.
